

Exercise “Conduct of Business” in processes and procedures that you declare and which Solyphony serves gratis.

Solyphony’s Purpose

Solyphony’s “Conduct of Business”¹ rests on:

Design, constructing the business domain
Practice, challenging routine
Coherence, foiling complexity
Partnership, combating disparity

These fundamental themes impress direction and promote advance in the engineering programmes we engage. The evidence of this practise validates our opinion that Solyphony will support enterprise, programme direction and project management activities in diverse business domains.

We wish to deploy Solyphony’s discipline and resources on multiple commercial fronts: SME groups, acting in concert, value the partnership that secures their unity; public services seek coherence in the data streams they generate and of their exercise of regulatory forces; . . .

Solyphony’s Proposition

Our conformation of an emergent business domain spans the interval from early procurement to product and brand delivery. We do not proffer this service gratis. But Solyphony’s practise reveals processes and procedures that recur, if with diverse purposes: programme direction harnesses complex processes² to constructive activities; linear procedures³ trace project management’s application of regulatory disciplines; detecting or predicting “issues”, PD and PM find resolutions in processes and procedures ordered linearly, but permitting regression. Solyphony accommodates these operational classes.

Pose a challenge

The apposing paragraph identifies four themes that stand in conjunction. Noticing them, recall Solyphony’s capacity to establish and enable the partnership of contractors, sub-contractors and suppliers, et al. and apply regulatory forces accurately.

Express your challenge in the commercial style and language that personifies practice in your business domain. Estimate the scope of the task in terms of the number of contributing organisations and numbers of actors they dispose to this duty. A few lines of script will suffice, immediately.

Pose questions, as you will.

Post a challenge

Post your challenge⁴, directly from the inquiring organisation, by e-mail sent to business@solyphony.com.

Identify the initiator:

- Title and name
- Status and duty in the organisation
- The organisation URL

Negotiate the challenge

Solyphony’s response to the initiator at the post e-mail address will invite an initial telephone discussion of the “post”.
